Pure Current Research Information System (CRIS) - User Agreement

The following agreement applies to use of the PURE Current Research Information System by Glasgow Caledonian University staff.

By depositing content in Pure, users agree to the following general terms:

- I grant Glasgow Caledonian University permission to preserve the content permanently in the Pure system (and understand this may require changing the format of the work to ensure future preservation and accessibility)
- I have the right to submit the content to the Pure system (as an author of the work or on behalf of an author/group of authors)
- To abide by the University's IT regulations and policies when using Pure:

Scope of agreement – research outputs

In addition, this section covers all research outputs and bibliographic data that users deposit in the Pure system for the research portal:

- To the best of my knowledge the work does not infringe any laws including copyright, libel and defamation
- Glasgow Caledonian University has the non-exclusive right to store and distribute any uploaded research outputs (publisher copyright permitting) via the research portal and free of charge
- I understand that the work can be harvested from the research portal by automated systems e.g. open access aggregators and data mining tools.
